Frightful Tragedy in Brittany.

A frightful tragedy has taken place in St. Brieuc, a seaport town in Brittany. A journalist named Le Foll, connected with a local newspaper, called Le Progress, sent an invitation to captain Wurtz, of the seventy-first regiment, to call at his effice on urgent business. The captain did so, and found himself in pres ence of M. Le Foll, who abruptly put to him this question: "Is it true that you visited my wife while I was absent from town?" The captain replied "yes." "You admit then," continued the husband, "to have relations with her?" "Not at all," protested Captain Wurtz. "Will you promise me," then said M. Le Foll, "to fight with any one who says that you are lover of my wife ?" "Certainly not," responded the military man, "because in that case I should be obliged to deal with all the blackguards you might choose to send me. But, if you desire it, I will fight with you." Then M. Le Foll followed with this strange | Pork. question: "Will you sign a declaration | Sugar .... stating on your honor that you have never had any improper intimacy with my wife?" "Certainly," said Captain

Wurtz, "as it is perfectly true." He sat down at a table, and began to write the required document, when M. Le Foll drew a poignard and stabbed him twice in the back. Although Captain Wurtz was struck down with the second blow he found enough strength to disarm his antagonist. Holding the dagger in hishand he said to his as assin, "Miserable wretch, the same result if none of the glass had put it with the other little chicks, and go and save yourself! I could kill you like a dog." (Je pourrais vous tuer comme un chien.) "But I want to come out of this affair with my honor unstained." Le Foll escaped from the office of his journal, and went to his own house carrying the dagger. Going up to his wife, he her feathers began to stick out, and she said, "I have killed your lover: now hundred miles with eternal ice, perhaps But the important feature of the al- bobbed her head a minute, and then she die in your turn."
